

YOUR PROBLEMS

"Maybe You'll Have Grown Up, Too..."

Dear Ann Landers: I don't need any lectures. What I want is some practical advice, so make it short and sweet.

I'm 35, a good-looking guy with expensive tastes. My job is steady but I'll never make a million. A woman who is 48 it nuts about me. She lends me her car and buys me gifts. Her second husband died four months ago and left her loaded. She's intelligent, no beauty but I think I could stand her. Both husbands were much older and never a dame was starved for love, she is. If I'd marry her she'd be in Seventh Heaven and I'd be on Easy Street.

I have a doll somewhere in the woodwork who is a little young for marriage right now. She has everything but money. In fact, she's having a tough go of it and could use a little financial help.

I know you're pretty good at name-calling, so go ahead, but give me some advice that makes sense. Remember, Babe, it's a tough world. — DILLY

Dear Robin Hood: If you've got any funny ideas about taking from the rich and giving to the poor, forget it. Should you allow this dowager to buy you, I promise you'll sweat for every dollar she slips into your greedy palm.

I suggest you wait until that little doll in the woodwork grows up. Maybe by that time you'll have grown up, too.

Dear Ann Landers: Last week was my mother's birthday and things haven't been the same between us since. I saved all year doing extra chores so I could buy my mother a nice birthday present. Well, I just couldn't think of anything to buy her because she has everything, so I gave her the money in an envelope.

She handed back the money without even saying thanks. When I asked her what was wrong she said "Money is no gift." I was so hurt I went to my room and cried.

When people give me money I think of it as a gift. Why doesn't my mother? Please settle this in my mind. It's making me very unhappy. I am 13 years old. — JUDY

Dear Judy: Your mother should have explained that it was wonderful of you to save money all year for her birthday gift — but you should have bought something in. (Continued on Page 28)
